PRESIDENT POINTS WAY TO "NORMALCY"

TELLS CONGRESS IT MUST PARE APPROPRIATIONS AND PRACTICE STRICT ECONOMY TO AVERT RUIN

NATION MUST WORK EARNESTLY TO SET
ITS OWN HOUSE IN ORDER TO COPE WITH WAR'S AFTERMATH

TAX REVISION PRIME NECESSITY

Washington, April 12.—The text of President Harding's message to Congress follows:

"Members of Congress, You have been called into extraordinary session to give your consideration to national problems far too pressing to be long neglected. We face the task of legislation and administration amid conditions as difficult as our government has ever confronted. Under the political system the people of the United States have charged the new Congress and the new Administration with the solution. Readjustment, reconstruction and restoration must follow in the wake of war. It is regrettable that we are so ill prepared for war's aftermath, so little ready for the ways of peace, but we are not to be discouraged. We must be more firmly resolved to take our work with the high hopes and be able to return to normal again. The American people have approached the situation with a tolerant and patient view. They are measuring some of the stern measures of give and take which is so essential to firm government. First in the mind must be the solution of the problems at home even though some phases of these are inseparably linked with our foreign relations.

The surest procedure in every government is to put its own house in order. The most important measure at home is to restrict national expenditures within the limits of our national income and at the same time measurably lessen the burden of the taxes now shouldered by the American people. One cannot be ungrateful that economy is a much employed cry very often stressed in pre-election appeals, but it is ours to make it the outstanding feature.

The nation cannot restrain except in its own activities, but it can be exploited in wholesale revision. In the fever of war our expenses were so little considered. The emergency was so impelling and appropriations were so unimpeded that we little noted the millions taken and believed the treasury inexhaustible. It will strengthen our resolution if we keep in mind that a continuance of such a course means inevitable disaster. Our current expenses are approximately five billions a year, a burden which is unbearable. There are two decisions to be employed in correction. One is a rigid restriction in appropriations and the other is the utmost economy in administration.

WORK RESUMED ON THIRD STREET BY PENNA. RAILROAD

Finally appreciating the situation and the absolute necessity for the removal of a highly dangerous condition the Pennsylvania Railroad Company started a crew of men at work yesterday afternoon on the completion of the plank paving between the rails of their track on Third Street. Before work was suspended on this job the plank was completed from East Street to Pine and from near Locust to the crossing at Market St.

The space from Market to Cherry street remains to be repaired. While plank also remains to be placed on the space from Cherry to Walnut Street, although the railroad company was recently granted permission by Council to pave between Locust and the latter block with lava as an experiment.

BUY TICKET OR PAY EXTRA NICKEL IS PENNSY RULE

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 12.—To encourage the purchase of tickets before boarding trains, and reduce the burden of collecting cash fares, which has become especially serious on suburban runs, the management of the Pennsylvania Railroad has decided to assess a penalty of five cents for each fare so paid on its lines east of Pittsburgh, Erie and Buffalo, when facilities exist for buying the tickets prior to boarding the train. The five cents extra charge will not be refunded, but will be retained by the Railroad Company.

Tickets covering the new regulations, and making the penalty effective May 15th, next, have been filed with the regulatory Commission.

It is the belief of the Management that when the Railroad provides facilities for the sale of tickets, it is not unreasonable to ask the public to utilize these facilities, thus saving the railroad from stopping to make change and account for cash fares. Such work always interferes with the attention the crews are required to give in protecting passengers boarding or leaving trains, particularly at the frequent stations on suburban runs.

Through thoughtlessness and failure to appreciate the situation, the tendency of passengers to pay cash fares, rather than take the trouble to purchase a ticket in advance, has increased

"SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS."

A summary of President Harding's recommendations on domestic issues follows:

Taxes—repeal of excess profits taxes and 'abolition of inequalities in the present system' with the wiping out rather than the shifting of the burden.

Tariff—"instant" emergency tariff legislation revision on a protective basis which will protect American wage standards, industry and agriculture.

Budget—prompt enactment of a budget bill and inauguration of business methods into the government.

Prices—extensive retail prices of perishable foods cannot be justified in view of the decline in raw food stuffs.

Railroads—A Congressional investigation is proposed. He declared for removal of remnants which are the "inheritance of capital's exploitation."

Highways—federal aid must be extended where the state maintains and repairs her own highways.

Merchant marine—Government encouragement but not operations of the Shipping Board. Reorganization of the merchant marine if found inadequate and coordination of inland and ocean water ways.

Communication—government economy in America owned and operated cables and prohibition of private monopolies. He also declared for lower rates on press matter.

JUDGE BELL FINDS SURE CURE FOR DISEASE "ILICITUS DISTILLICUSS"

Now that the Clearfield County authorities have scientifically determined and successfully isolated the germ "illicitus distillicuss" Judge Bell seems to feel he has discovered a real antidote for this highly prevalent disorder in these parts.

The antidote or cure which it is believed will solve the problem of both the home-grown still and the festive bootlegger was tried out yesterday afternoon on Angelo Benetto, of Curwensville.

Benetto was arrested last week by Chief of Police Guy Clark at Curwensville for continuous and long persisted in manufacturing and bootlegging of "Raisin Jack." When brought before the court Angelo entered a plea of guilty. "Twice then that His Honor announced the result of his scientific research and stated that while Angelo would receive the first inoculation, he would not be last as from this date henceforward, he that maketh for himself a still and polluteh his friend with strong drink that roareth like a lion and stingeth like an adder, should suffer in accordance with the formula advanced or laid down in this case now pending. Having delivered himself thusly or of words of the same import and effect Judge Bell announced that the sentence of the court was that he, the said Angelo Benetto, should pay into the treasury of the county of Clearfield the sum of $500, together with costs of this operation and in addition thereto and in accordance therewith should also undergo an imprisonment in the Clearfield county jail for a period constituted or embraced by the following three calendar months beginning the calculating or computing of said or such time from the day of this deliverance, i. e. the 11th day of April, A. D. 1921.

Henceforth, hereafter and henceforward all and every person or persons coming into the Clearfield County courts charged and afterwards convicted by their own word of mouth or otherwise of the crime of illicitly making or purveying of moonshine liquor, he or they, and every such person so offending and being convicted, shall suffer like and similar penalty as that hereupon this day is visited upon the prisoner at the bar.

Therefore, all bootleggers and illicit liquor dispensers generally, who feel that absence from their usual avocation or walk in life for a three month period will be too confining, should immediately if not sooner, engage in some more respectable, if not so remunerative business. A word to the worldly wise should conserve present gains and save "time."

COMMONWEALTH HOTEL OF HARRISBURG IS HARD HIT BY FIRE

HARRISBURG, Pa., April 12.—The historic Commonwealth Hotel, a landmark in this section of the country, was partially destroyed by fire last night, with a loss of $100,000. The fire started in the basement of a shoe store and rapidly spread to the hotel.

It constitutes a measure of relief for the train crews and the Management believes, is wise and proper for this purpose. It is hoped that the five cent penalty will prove adequate to accomplish the result sought, but if it does not, a higher charge may prove necessary.

The penalty, of course, will not have the slightest effect on commuters or others holding regular tickets.

KAISER MAY FOLLOW WIFE'S BODY ONLY TO BOUNDARY LINE

DOORN, Holland, April 12.—The German flags were flying at half mast over Doorn Castle today, as members of the Hohenzollern family gathered for the funeral of ex-Empress Augusta Victoria. The Crown Prince reached here from Wieringen. His arrival was different from his usual entry into the town. He usually comes in a roaring automobile, but this time his entry was very quiet. He brought with him black clad officials of the Dutch government to condole with his father. The gates at the castle were under double guard. Within the grounds all was quiet. The ex-Empress remained in doors. He had isolated himself and showed signs of deep grieving. Plans were made today for the departure early tomorrow morning. The body will be taken to the railroad station in a specially built automobile. When the boundary line is reached the Kaiser and the Crown Prince will be halted, while the remainder of the party will go on to Berlin.

NEW PRESIDENT OF STATE COLLEGE IS DUE THIS WEEK

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., April 12.—After being vacant for almost a year, the presidential chair at the Pennsylvania State College will be occupied once more within a week. Dr. John Martin Thomas, the newly elected president, is expected to arrive here by the end of this week and will shortly be ready to assume his new duties. He left Middlebury College, at Middlebury, Vermont where he had been president for thirteen years, about the middle of last week, and is now in New York. It is probable that he will arrive here on Friday.

That Dr. Thomas is looked upon as a leading educator and a competent executive, has been evidenced throughout all New England since his announcement in January that he would accept the post at Penn State.

Many expressions of confidence in Dr. Thomas' ability have been received by college officials here, coming from all sides. He was the guest of honor at the annual dinner of the Middlebury College alumni in Boston last Wednesday and regrets were heard on all sides upon his departure as president of that institution. Among those who spoke on that occasion was Dr. James L. Barton, a Middlebury trustee and head of the Near East Relief.

"Middlebury's loss is Penn State's gain," he said.

The inauguration of Dr. Thomas will probably be staged early next fall, and he will spend the intervening time in becoming acquainted with the college and its many activities. The attention of all college officials is now centered on the appropriation budget request of $6,500,000 that is being considered by the state legislature, as the immediate future of the college rests largely on the amount granted for maintenance and buildings for the next two years.

For Immediate Declaration Of State Of Technical Peace With Germany

But Would Avoid Any Statement That Could Possibly Be Construed To Affect European Claims

U. S. ALONE IN STATE OF WAR

By RAYMOND CLAPPER

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 12.—Congress should adopt a resolution declaring peace with Germany without further delay, President Harding recommended in his message to Congress today. Such action, he said, could in no wise be considered as deserting the Allies. At the same time he made plain his belief that the League of Nations is dead.

Measures for lower taxes and lower retail prices were the outstanding features of his recommendations dealing with domestic problems. The peace resolution, Harding explained, should undertake to be no more than a declaration of a state of peace and should not stand in the way of reparation and restoration to war torn Europe. He spoke of the association of nations but this problem must be delicately considered. The President said the United States alone, of all the Allies, remained in a technical state of war. "This condition ought not to be permitted," he said.

"The establishments of a state of technical peace should be made without further delay. I should approve a resolution by Congress to that effect with the qualifications essential to protect all of our rights." He said the declaration should not contain any reference to the future policy toward Europe.

President Harding laid emphasis upon the domestic problems. There is no more pressing problem he said, than the restriction of national expenditures to the national incomes and at the same time lift the burden of war taxes. Economy is to be "the outstanding and ever impelling" purpose of both the legislature and the administration, he said.

Creation of a Department of Public Welfare was advocated by Harding in accordance with his campaign pledges.

He declared we should encourage the merchant marine, and should have a budget system and protective tariff and that steps should be taken to halt lynching.

By Raymond Clapper

Washington, April 12.—President Harding carefully went over his message to Congress with his cabinet today before reading it to a joint session of the House and Senate. The message was a composite of the views of Harding and recommendations of his cabinet. He has, for instance, conferred with Secretary Hoover on foreign trade and Secretary Denby on the Navy.

Whether the President will follow permanently the custom of reading his message to Congress in person will depend on the reception he gets at the capital today. He appeared before Congress in accordance with the custom revived by Woodrow Wilson but will not continue if Congress shows any disposition to construe his appearance at the capital as an attempt to dominate the legislative arm.

Washington, April 12.—The Democratic minority in Congress was showing fight today although hopelessly outnumbered. In both House and Senate the members protested against the Republican attempt to increase the membership of committees from 15 to 16 members. The additional member in each case would be a new Republican for whom a place is made. The Democrats claim this is a despotic use of partisan advantage and that it gives the Democrats an unfair disadvantage in the framing of important legislation. Senator Hitchcock, Democratic leader, said he would fight the rule as hard as possible although the Republican margin of 22 votes means defeat for the Democrats.

Washington, April 12.—The first consideration of the 67th session of Congress after the reading of the presidential message will be the Columbian treaty in the Senate while the House will hear new bills until Wednesday when the Emergency Tariff bill is slated to go through. Senators Lodge and Kellogg will speak on the Columbian treaty. Senator Penrose will meet with Finance Committee tomorrow for a tax hearing.

SMOKE RUN BREWER LIKELY TO TAKE JUUGE BELL'S CURE

Constable Oscar Mannion, of Bigler township, continues to pursue the bootlegger and the illicit liquor maker in his halliwick. Yesterday Mannion took Mike Gun-calas, of Smoke Run, into custody, charged with making his own. He found part of Mike's still and also found two guns in his possession. Mike being an alien he was fined $25 for the guns by 'Squire Ruffner at Madera, and also gave $500 bail for his appearance at court.

WASHES WITHOUT RUBBING

THE GAMADAY WAY, THE SANITARY WAY

The Secret is in the Gamaday Process

Washer Wringer

Why is it that the Gamaday-type washer—the famous Gamaday Electric Washer-Wringer—leaves the clothes massed by hand-wringing? How can it make clothes spotless without rubbing, without any hard work? The explanation is simple—the secret is in the Gamaday process of cleansing. The Gamaday process carries the clothes up, up, up, through the hot water and wringer, then drops them, to fall on other garments below.

The falling, dipping, and squeezing which result through the impact of their fall, frees the clothes of all the dirt. It's a simple process—but better still, it's a process that is easy on the clothes. You can put in a heavy garment and a fine waist at the same time—the result will reach your highest expectation.

FOUR BIG STEPS TOWARD REVISION

George Wharton Pepper Makes Clear Exposition of Way to Achieve New Constitution.

Philadelphia. — The passage on first reading of the Sprad Crow bill for the calling of a constitutional convention has aroused great interest here. The prospect of the early passage of the bill through the legislature has brought about great activity among the sponsors of the movement, looking toward a general dissemination of information about the constitution throughout the state.

"As the matter stands now," it was stated yesterday by George Wharton Pepper, "the question is: shall the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania be given an opportunity to determine at the polls whether or not a convention shall be called to frame a new constitution? That is the first question, a question for the legislature. If the legislature answers that question in the affirmative, the second question is for the people, a question which they will settle at the polls next September, namely, shall we or shall we not have the Constitutional Convention?"

"If the people, next September," continued Mr. Pepper, "vote affirmatively upon that question, the next question will be decided by the Constitutional Convention summoned in accordance with their will, namely, what shall be the provisions of the new constitution which we shall commend to the people for their acceptance? And when the Constitutional Convention, called in response to the will of the people, has formulated a document which it deems worthy to be the fundamental law of the state, that document will be submitted to the people and the fourth and last question will be the one which the people themselves will then decide, whether or not to accept the work of their Constitutional Convention. Now, when the questions are put in that order and when you think of the time which must elapse between the decisions of these successive questions, I think it will be seen that there is not much danger of our being stampeded into anything that is revolutionary. We are not going to make up our minds in a hurry to do anything that is precipitate or hasty."

Referring to certain objections that this is a time of unrest and therefore not a proper time to formulate a new constitution, Mr. Pepper said: "I, for one, am of the belief that relative to the fact that we are in a time of unrest, these are days of peace and quiet. I think it is a short-sighted man who fails to perceive that this is so, and as I regard the revision of our constitution as an inevitable necessity, as something that is coming sooner or later, an operation which must be performed, I believe this is the time ordained of God for the people of this Commonwealth to make their good resolutions for the future and that the constitution is going to be revised now."

Asked as to the probable final action of the Legislature, Mr. Pepper replied: "There is only one way in which we can neutralize the opposition and that is by presenting a united front in our advocacy of a Constitutional Convention. If we unite in calling upon the Legislature to give the people a chance to vote upon it, we can put a legislator in such a position that he will think twice before he will look his constituents in the eye and say, 'when you had an opportunity to record your will I voted no' on that proposition and withheld the chance from you."

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION A NECESSITY

The Constitutional Commission appointed by the Governor after going over the present constitution, article by article and section by section, has submitted its report to the legislature. A large number of substantial changes are recommended and, as the only practical method of accomplishing the revision, the report recommends that the question of holding a constitutional convention be submitted to a vote of the people.

The changes recommended are mainly changes in the machinery of government. They do not involve changes in the great principles under which the rights of men are safeguarded, by our constitution. These changes would require the separate amendment of about one hundred sections, and the submission of these amendments to the voters would require an enormous ballot upon which the voters would have to make two large a number of crosses. Many of the recommended changes are interdependent and the adoption of some and the rejection of others would produce most unfortunate results. This method is obviously out of the question. The calling of a constitutional convention remains. When a carefully selected commission, after more than a year of consideration, recommends many changes as being desirable in the constitution, it would be most unfortunate to find opposition to submitting to the people the question of calling a convention for further consideration and action.

Don Juan's Hibernian blood thrilled; he cast about for a weapon in this emergency, and his glance rested on the body of the dead officer beside the gate. To possess himself of the latter's heavy "cut-and-thrust" sword was the work of seconds, and with a royal good will Don Juan launched himself into the heart of the scrum.

Launched Himself Into the Heart of the Scrum.

He had a hazy impression that he was striking and stabbing, that others were striking and stabbing at him, that men crowded and breathed and pressed and swore and grunted around him, that the fighting-room was no better than it might have been, but was rapidly improving. Then the gory fog lifted, and Doctor Pacheco had Don Juan by the hand; they stood together in the arsenal entrance, and the little Doctor was explaining to the war-mad Don Juan that all was over in so far as the arsenal was concerned—the survivors of the garrison having surrendered—that now, having the opportunity, he, Doctor Pacheco, desired to thank Don Juan Cafetero for his life. Don Juan looked at him amazedly, for he hadn't the slightest idea what the Doctor was talking about. He spat, gazed around at the litter of corpses on the arsenal lawn, and nodded his red head approvingly.

In an incredibly short space of time the news that the arsenal had been captured and that Sarras was besieged in the palace spread through the city. The sight of the red banner of revolution floating over the arsenal for the first time in fifteen years brought hundreds of willing recruits to the rebel ranks, as Ricardo Rucy had anticipated; these were quickly supplied with arms and ammunition; by ten o'clock a battalion had been formed and sent off together with the machine gun company, to connect with the San Bruno contingent advancing from the south to turn the flank of the government troops, while the equipping of an additional battalion proceeded within the arsenal. As fast as the new levies were armed, they were hurried off to reinforce the handful of white men who had, after clearing the arsenal, advanced on the palace and now, with machine guns from the arsenal commanding all avenues of escape from the city where Sarras found himself, were quietly awaiting developments, merely keeping an eye open for surprises.

Thus the forenoon passed, and now o'clock Don Juan...

the absence of close-range fighting had elected himself ordnance sergeant—passed out the last rifle and ammunition. He was red with slaughter, slippery with gun-grease, dripping with perspiration, and filthy with dust and dirt. "Begorra," he declared, "a cowb! bottle av heer world gu fine now." Then, recalling his limitations, he sighed and put the thought from him. It revived in him, however, for the first time since he had left the steamer, a memory of John Stuart Webster, and his promise to the latter to report on the progress of the war. So Don Juan sought Doctor Pacheco in his headquarters and learned that a sign-man, who had been in communication with General Rucy, who reported the situation well in hand, with no doubt of an overwhelming victory before the day should be over. This was a dry relief and bars of information Don Juan gleaned and then deserted the Sarras headquarters, where he was as casually as he had joined it, to make his preparations way down the Calle San R...

CHAPTER XV.

Throughout the forenoon Webster and Dolores, from the deck of the steamer, watched the city. By ten o'clock the sounds of battle had swelled to a deeper, steeper roar, and refugees arriving brought various and fragmentary stories of the fighting. From this hodge-podge of misinformation, however, Webster decided that Ricardo's troops were forcing the issue with vim and determination, and since the most furious fighting was now well in toward the heart of the city, it seemed reasonable to presume the struggle was for possession of the arsenal and palace.

At noon the deep diapason of conflict began to slacken; by one o'clock it had dwindled considerably, and at two o'clock Webster, gazing anxiously cityward, observed Leber's launch coming rapidly out from shore. At the wheel stood Don Juan Cafetero; as the launch shot in under the vessel's side he looked up, searching for Webster's face among the curious throng that lined the rail.

"Who has won?" a voice called, and another, evidently a humorist and a shrewd judge of human nature, replied: "Why ask foolish questions? The rebels, of course, have won. The Irish and the Irish are born rebels. Look at the scoundrel. He's black with gun grease and burned powder where he isn't red with blood. The butcher!"

"Rough-a-ballagh!" he shrieked. "We've got the devils cornered now. 'Twill be over two hours hence."

Don Juan tied up the launch at the gangway and leaped up the ladder, three steps at a time. "Glory be to God," he panted and hurled himself into Webster's arms. "I was in it! I was. I got back in time to catch up with the lads at the warehouse and they were the fine, fightin' devils, I'll gamble you. Och, 'twas a grand bit av a fight—whilst it lasted. They put me in the motor-truck, loadin' the belts with cartridges as fast as the gunners emptied them, but faith they couldn't keep me there. I got into the heart av the scrimmage in the yard av the arsenal an' faith 'twas well for that little Docther Pacheco I did. 'Twas wurk to me likin'. I'd a machine—"

"You bloodthirsty scoundrel!" Webster shook the war-mad son of Erin. "I told you not to mix in it, but to hang around on the fringe of the fight, and bring us early news. Suppose you'd been killed? Who would have come for us then? Didn't I tell you we had a dinner engagement in the palace?"

"Me on the fringes av a fight?" spluttered Don Juan, amazed and outraged. "Take shame for yourself, sor. There was niver the likes av me hung around the fringes av a fight, an' well ye know it."

"I'm amazed that you even remembered your instructions," Webster rasped at him.

"Sure, our division had clanned up nicely an' I had nothin' else to do, God bless ye. They were besiegin' the palace when I left, an' small chance av takin' it for a couple av hours; what fightin' there was on the outside was street shootin'—an' not to me likin'."

"Is it quite safe to bring Miss Rucy ashore, John?"

"'Tis safe enough at the Hotel Mateo. We have the city for half a mile bevant, in the rear av them—an' they're not fightin' to get to the bay. The guards an' some av the Fifteenth Infantry regiment are in the palace an' the chariot close by, an' them that we failed to get in the arsenal have lined them. But the bulk av the Sarras army is tryin' to break through to the south an' west, to get to the hills. Dye mind the spur thrack that runs in a semicircle around the city? Well, thin, the rebels are behind the embankment, takin' it easy. Have no worry, sor. When we've took the palace we'll move on an' drive the vagabonds from behin' up to that railroad embankment, where General Rucy can bid them the time av day."

Webster turned to Dolores. "Do you wish to go ashore?"

She nodded, her flashing eyes bent in admiration upon the gory, grimy Don Juan Cafetero, for she was half Irish, and in that amazing meeting she knew the outcast for one of her blood. "I think my brother will sleep in his father's old room tonight," she murmured softly. "And I would sleep with him."

They followed Don Juan down the beach to the launch and sped back to the shore. The door of Leber's warehouse stood wide open; within was a litter of greasy rags and broken packing cases, with Leber, quite mystified, sitting on a keg of nails and staring curiously at it all.

Guided by Don Juan Cafetero, Webster and Dolores passed on up the Calle San Rosario. Occasionally a bullet, fired two or three miles to the west, droned lazily overhead or dropped with a sharp metallic sound on the corrugated-iron roofs of a building. At the hotel the proprietor alone was in evidence, seated behind the desk smoking in profound indifference.

In response to Webster's eager inquiries for the latest news from the front, the placid fellow shrugged and murmured: "Quion sabe?" Evidently for him such stirring scenes had long since lost their novelty; the bloom was off the peach, as it were.

Webster went upstairs and locked himself to an ether anesthetic and several spare clips of shells which he had left in his trunk. On his return to the lobby, Dolores saw what a very near-sighted person, indeed, would have been—so sure that he was not pleased to remain in the hotel and with the spirit of adventure strong within him was desirous of progressing still farther toward the firing line.

Superstition Concerning Amethyst

The pious crusaders who fought to gain the Holy Land for Christendom were amethysts to preserve them from harm. Thus used as an amulet it soon acquired the title of "the soldier's stone." The people of that period considered the gem a symbol of pure love or sincerity, employed it to express mourning and wore it when bearing petitions to the overlord. They also believed it capable of preventing the descent of hailstones and locusts.

SETTLING IN TERMS OF PRODUCT IS SOUND BASIS FOR FARM RENT

The Crop Yield Should Bear a Close Relation to the Rent Per Acre.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Thomas Kashrent greeted his landlord, John Acreowner, in the Kashrent kitchen. The visitor took the chair proffered and filled his pipe.

"Thomas," said he, when their pipes were well alight, "I want to get you thinking over an idea that I picked up the other day from a bulletin sent out to me by the United States Department of Agriculture. It's made up by the office of farm management and its subject matter is of interest to us both. The title is, 'The Farm Lease Contract.'"

"Now," he continued, "I'd be a pretty poor judge of human nature if I didn't know that you're feeling a little blue over that cash-rent contract you signed with me last fall. You realize that there are changed conditions, since we made out that lease, that will make it hard for you to pay cash—and you're one of those men whose word is as good as his bond. Neither of us knew when we signed that paper that grain and other farm produce were going to take the tumble they have taken, but it doesn't alter the fact that our contract, as it stands, is hard on you."

Farmer Hard Hit

"Prices certainly dropped," agreed Kashrent, with a regretful sigh. "They slumped before I had a chance to haul what I intended to sell. All things considered, I'd have been better off if we'd taken the farm on shares instead of on a cash basis."

"The landlord nodded understandingly. 'I'm not here to tell you that I'll reduce your rent materially, nor am I going to offer to change the present contract for a contract on the share basis, but I'm going to propose something that is the next thing to it. I'm going to try to show you that I appreciate a good, honest tenant. In case grain is up again by fall you may be able to pay the agreed cash and still make a fair profit. Besides, my own expenditures are more or less fixed and I must have cash to meet them with, but I'm going to see if I can't help you to help me by meeting you halfway.'"

"What do you think of adding a clause to the contract whereby you will be given the option of paying me in terms of bushels of corn, oats, or wheat?" This Farmers' Bulletin I spoke of tells about similar arrangements which southern farm owners and tenants have put into practice. A good bit of cotton land is rented on a basis such that the tenant pays so many bales, or so many pounds of cotton, for the use of the land for a year. The amount of the rent is closely related, or should be, to the value of the produce which the tenant is able to raise—that's why farmers and landlords find difficulty in fixing the rent every year. They're trying to put a value on a crop that isn't out of the ground yet, you see. If you agree to pay me so many bushels of grain instead of a fixed amount in dollars and cents, I'll be taking my chance along with you and our good and bad years will run along together. What do you think of the idea?"

"I believe we can come to an agreement, Mr. Acreowner—one that will be just to both of us. If the terms are right you'll stand a chance of getting a little more than your original rent to compensate for taking a share in the risk that I must carry alone now. That's fair. How can we figure it out?"

"Let's suppose that it takes 300 bushels of grain to pay the cash rent under average conditions. Now suppose we add 10 per cent to cover my risk of a further drop in prices. We can hit an average by going over the records for a few years back and figuring from them just how many bushels had to be sold each year to bring in the amount of the rent in cash. Here are some figures I worked out last evening—they show the average portion of the corn crop that was needed to pay the cash rent over a 10-year period."

He handed his tenant a sheet of figures that looked much like this:

Year	Price at which the corn sold	Cash rent per acre in cash	Bushels of corn it took to pay the cash rent on an acre
1911	$1.33	$3.00	5.7
1912	1.35	3.00	5.8
1913	.90	3.00	6.4
1914	.85	3.00	6.4
1915	.81	4.00	7.8
1916	.80	4.00	8.0
1917	1.15	4.00	3.7
1918	1.22	5.00	4.1
1919	1.30	6.00	5.0
1920	.81	7.00	10.9
Average			6.3

"Well," observed Kashrent after a pause, "that puts the business in a new light, doesn't it? To relieve me from the necessity of making cash payments you're willing to take the value in corn with an additional 10 per cent to cover your liabilities if the price goes away down? Is that it? Then I'd be renting the land from you for about 7 bushels of corn for each acre? I'll take you up if that's true. Why, look, man! It took nearly 11 bushels to pay the rent on an acre last year—by your own figures!"

"Let's hope that was an exceptional year," smiled Acreowner. "Anyway, I'll come out all right in the long run." Details to Decide.

They had many questions to decide before the matter was finally settled. They had to agree whether or not the entire rent was to be settled in terms of corn, or whether other crops should have a share. They decided the matter of the quality of the corn that Mr. Kashrent was to bring his landlord, and where it was to be delivered. There was a question as to whether or not a date should be established on which the tenant must declare his option—cash or corn—and whether or not the landlord should have a similar choice. Perhaps they had to recast the whole lease to agree to the new terms of payment and without reference to the cash at all, but in the end they had a contract which gave justice and protection to both parties if crop prices should prove so unstable as some men predict they will be. In addition, Mr. Kashrent has a landlord whom he respects and Mr. Acreowner has a tenant whom he can rely upon.

Landlords and tenants who find themselves facing a similar problem can get additional information from the office of farm management and farm economics, United States Department of Agriculture, to aid them in making the adjustment.

ALMANAC IS PLENARY GUIDE TO FARM WORK

Good Bits of Advice by Department of Agriculture.

Farmers Reminded to Do Right Thing at Proper Time and Told Where Information on Many Subjects May Be Obtained.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Beware of false prophets. Don't plant by the moon; but get the best seed and prepare the seed bed, then plant when soil and moisture conditions are right." "Keeping farm accounts never worried Adam; but he was only a gardener." "The owner of a scrub bull should have a leather medal—made from the bull's hide." These bits of farm advice are contained in "An Agricultural Almanac for 1921," issued by the United States Department of Agriculture to remind farmers to do the right thing at the right time and to tell them where to secure information on agricultural subjects.

The almanac, which appears as Farmers' Bulletin 1202, is published, the department says, in response to a large demand from farmers for a calendar of work showing the timely use of new farm facts. Seasonal advice and suggestions are given on such topics as the weather, farm operations, marketing, wild life, and woods work. References to other publications of the department tell where detailed information on each subject can be had.

A section on "Farm Hints" discusses farm laws and gives tables and directions for such things as mixing stock feed, fertilizers and spray solutions; weights of seed and grain and other information needed by farmers and their families. A limited number of copies is available for distribution by the United States Department of Agriculture and may be had upon application.

Well to Remember in Preparing Bed That Diseased Seed Will Produce Poor Plants.

In bedding sweet potatoes, it is well to remember that diseased potatoes will produce diseased plants, which in turn will produce a diseased crop. Exercise care to get clean, healthy plants and grow the crop in soil that is disease-free.

WEBSTER—MAN'S MAN

On hope of eliciting some favorable news as to the progress of the fight. She realized, however, that he would do his duty and remain with her in the hotel; so she said gaily:

"Suppose we walk out a little farther, Caliph. Many of the side streets will be as safe and peaceful as one could desire, and if warfare should develop in our vicinity we can step into some house."

"I do not like to have you run the slightest risk," he began, but she pook-pooked him into silence, took him by the arm with a great air of camaraderie, and declared they should go forth to adventure—but cautiously.

Webster glanced at Don Juan. "We can go a half or three quarters of a mile out the Calle San Rosario, sor," the Irishman answered. "After that 'twill not be a pleasant sight for the young leddy—an' there may be some shootin'. Squads av the government troops took refuge in the houses an' took to snipin'. 'Twill be shlow wurk roundin' the last av them up. Even after the fight is over, there'll be scatterin' shootin' scrapes all av the night long, I'm thinkin'."

"At the slightest danger we'll turn back," Webster announced, and with Don Juan Cafetero scouting the way a block in advance they progressed slowly toward the center of the disturbance.

Soon they passed a horse dead in the middle of the street; a little farther on one of the machine-gun company, a lank Texan, sat on the curb rolling a cigarette with his left hand. He had a bullet through his right shoulder and another through the calf of his leg and had received no first aid attention; the flies were bothering him considerably and he was cursing softly and fluently, like the ex-mule-skinner he was.

Farther on another white invader lay face down in the gutter; for him the fight had ended almost ere it had begun. In the next block half a dozen sandal-footed Sobranteans, in the blue and red-trimmed uniform of the Guardia Civil, lay sprawled in uncouth attitudes, where the first blast of a machine gun had caught them as they rushed out of the police station to repel the advancing mercenaries.

Seeing that the main street of the city would assume even a more grisly aspect the longer they followed it, Don Juan led Webster and Dolores a couple of blocks down a cross street and turned out into the Calle de Hernandez, parallel to the Calle San Rosario. There had been no shooting in this street, apparently; as they proceeded not even a stray bullet whined down the silent calle.

Four blocks from the government palace they found the narrow sidewalks of this quiet street lined with wounded from both sides, with a doctor and half a dozen of Ricardo's hired fighters ministering to them; as they threaded their way between the recumbent figures they came upon Mother Jenks, brandy bottle and glass in hand, "doing her bit."

"Hah! So here you are, my lamb," she greeted Dolores. "Right-o. Just where yer ought to be, Gor' bless yer sweet face. Let these poor misfortunate lads see that the sister o' the new president ain't too proud to care for 'em. 'Ere, lass. 'Old up the 'ead o' this young cockerel with the 'ole in 'is neck. 'Ere, lad, Tyke a brace now! 'Ere's some o' your own people, not a lot o' bloomin' yellor bellies, come to put something else in yer neck—some think that'll stimulate yer."

The "young cockerel," a blond youth of scarce 20 summers, twisted his head and grinned up at Dolores as she knelt beside him to lift him up. "Here, here, sister," he mumbled, "you'll get that white dress dirty. Never mind me, it's just a flesh wound, only my neck has got stiff and I'm weak from loss of blood."

Mother Jenks winked at Webster as she set a glass of brandy to the stricken adventurer's lips. "Give me a bit o' the white meat, as my saluted 'Enery used to s'y," she murmured comically.

Dolores looked up at Webster. "I'll stay here," she said simply. "I've found a job helping Mother Jenks. You and Don Juan may run along if you wish. I know you're as curious as children."

"You're right. It would have been impossible for any man with red corpuscles in his blood to harken to the shouting and ghouts only three city blocks distant without yearning to see the fight itself."

"I'll return in 15 minutes at the latest," he promised her, and with Don Juan Cafetero who had hooked himself to a rifle and bayonet from one of the wounded, he turned the corner into the next street which they followed west through a block plentifully sprinkled with the dead of both factions.

Don Juan led the way through an alley in the rear of the Cathedral de la Santa Cruz to the door of the sacristy; as he placed his hand on the latch three rifle bullets struck around them, showering them with fragments of falling masonry.

"There's a house party in the neighborhood," yelled Don Juan and darted into the church, with Webster at his heels, just in time to escape another fusillade. They walked through the sacristy and passed through a door into the great cathedral, with its high, carved, gothic arch ceiling. Through the thick-closed doors of the main entrance, lost in the dimness of space out in front, the sounds of the battle half a block away were dimly distant.

They passed the altar and Don Juan genuflected and crossed himself reverently. "I'll be a'ther makin' me confession," he whispered to Webster. "Wait for me, sor."

Pineapple and Cheese.—Arrange slices of pineapple on white leaves of lettuce. Fill the hole in the center of the pineapple with cream cheese that has been softened to a paste with a little thick cream. Place a dash of paprika on the cheese and pile lightly on each ring pieces of apple, banana and grapefruit. Garnish with cherries and serve with French dressing.

Buttered Cream Onions.—Cook two bunches of young green onions, stems and all, in boiling salted water until tender, then drain. Lay the onions on buttered toast, pour over each a tablespoonful of melted butter and serve very hot. A thick rich cream sauce may be used if preferred.

Chocolate Cream Pie.—Line a deep plate with plain paste, wet the edge and put on a half-inch rim. Prick with a fork and bake in a hot oven. Prepare a filling by mixing five tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with one-half cupful of sugar and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Boil with one-fourth of a cupful of cold milk, add two cupfuls of scalded milk and cook over hot water for half an hour, stirring while thickening. Melt two squares of chocolate, add four tablespoonfuls of hot water, stir until smooth and add to the mixture. Remove from the stove and fold in the whites of two eggs, beaten stiff. Flavor with one teaspoonful of vanilla. While still hot pour the filling into the pie, just as the crust comes from the oven. Serve cold, covered with one cupful of whipped cream unsweetened.

Baked Stuffed Heart.—Wash a beef heart, remove veins and arteries. Stuff with bread stuffing. Lard with salt pork, sprinkle with salt and pepper and dredge with flour. Place in a double boiler and cook in moderate oven three hours.

"I'll Stay Here."

He leaned his rifle against the altar railing, crossed the church and touched lightly on the shoulder a monk kneeling in prayer before the altar of the Virgin; the latter bent his head while Don Juan whispered; then he rose and both went into the confessional, while Webster found a bench along the wall and waited.

Presently Don Juan came forth, knelt on the red-tiled floor and prayed—something, Webster suspected, he had not done for quite a while. And when he had finished his supplication and procured his rifle, Webster joined him, the monk unbolted the door and from the quiet of the house of God they passed out into the street and the tumult of hell.

"I've been close to death this day," Don Juan explained. "an' the day is not done. Be the same token, 'tis long since I'll made me last confession; sure, until you picked me out av the altar, sor, 'tis little thought I had for the hereafter."

From their place they could see a dozen or more of Ricardo's hired fighters crouched under the shelter of the palace walls across the street. "I think we'll be safer there," Webster cried, as a couple of bullets struck the stone steps at their feet and ricocheted against the cathedral door. "That rifle of yours is making you a marked man, Don Juan."

They ran across the street and joined the men under the palace wall. "What's this?" Don Juan demanded briskly. "Have ye not smoked them out yet?"

"Noddings doing," a young German answered. "Der chief has sent word dot we shall not affilery use on der balance. Men all around it we haf, mit a machine gun commanding each gate; most der boys have chust moved out west in der rear of der government troops."

"Then," Don Juan declared with conviction, "there'll be no fighting here to speak av, until later."

"Der is plenty of clay hunting snipers, mein friend. Der houses hereabouts vos filled mit dem."

"I'll have no cat fights in mine," Don Juan retorted. "Come wit' me, so, an' we'll be in at the death out beyant at the railroad embankment."

"Too late," Webster answered, for on the instant to the west the crackle of rifle and machine gun fire interlarded with the staccato barks of a Maxim-Vickers broke out, swelling almost immediately to a steady outpouring of sound. "We'll stay here where we're safe for the finals. When General Rney has cleaned up out there he'll come here to take command."

How to Use Asbestos Paper.
Has anyone else discovered what a great help asbestos paper is in baking? Anything in the oven can be kept from becoming too much by putting one or two sheets of asbestos paper over it, without danger of burning as ordinary paper does. If the bottom of the oven is too hot, some asbestos paper can be slipped under the pan. A piece of it can also be put under a pan on top of the stove. I have found it possible to purchase a book of asbestos sheets, 14 inches by 9 inches, ten in number, and they last indefinitely.—Hedra Housekeeping.

Flint Man Tells How Nerv-Worth Overcomes Them Along With Other Nervous Troubles.

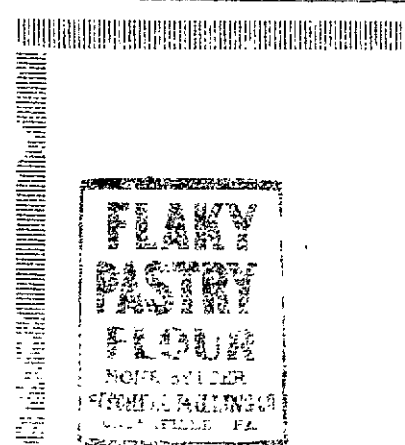

"I have found your Nerv-Worth very beneficial for nervousness," writes W. H. Howd, of 1217 Mason St., Flint, Mich. "I was unable to get a good night's rest on account of my nervous condition, but after I had taken 2 bottles of Nerv-Worth I was greatly improved. I recommended Nerv-Worth to a neighbor, who was sick in bed with nervous headaches. After taking not quite one bottle, she was able to be up and around the house. I cheerfully recommend Nerv-Worth to those who are afflicted with nervous disorders." Thousands suffer from nervous ills and lack of nerve force with its attending ills. If they would follow the example set by so many people, they would find that Nerv-Worth would give them relief. The above statement will carry a message of hope to those who suffer from these troubles. Remember that Nerv-Worth is sold on the money-back basis. If, after taking your first trial bottle, you are not satisfied, your money will be refunded. Sold by all leading druggists everywhere. Price $1.25.

SALTS FINE FOR ACHING KIDNEYS

We Eat Too Much Meat, Which Clogs Kidneys, then Back Hurts and Bladder Bothers You

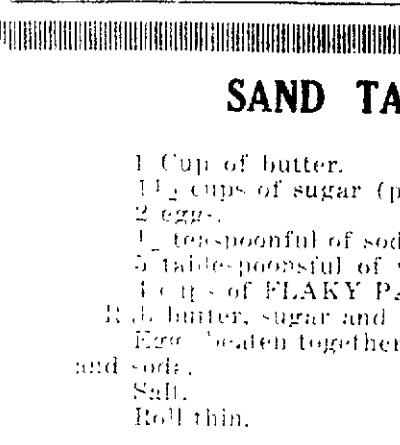

Most people forget that the kidneys, like the bowel, get clogged and need a flushing occasionally, as we have backache and feel pains in the kidney region, even to the point of no longer urinating. It is a common bladder disorder.

and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salt from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then get fine. This famous salt is made from the red of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal action. It also neutralizes the acids in the blood, and cures bladder disorders.

makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean thus avoiding serious complications. A well known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salt to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Jewels Early Drew Men's Attention. Personal ornaments or jewels appear to have been among the very first objects on which the invention and ingenuity of man were exercised. There is no record of any people so rude as not to employ some kind of personal decoration. The jewelry of the ancient Egyptians has been preserved in their tombs.

program over to the American Legion who have not the least doubt will accept the obligation placed upon their shoulders with the same devotion that they showed when facing the foe across the sea and doing their duty in camp at home. If the members of the Legion Post take hold and conduct themselves on Memorial Day, we can rest assured that there will be no failure in the day's program, as they will have worked out. We do not mean to say, however, that the citizens of this town are to step down and out entirely, but expect them, and we will not be disappointed either, to assist the American Legion in every way possible to make the day one of everlasting memory of our soldiers dead.

The Danlow mines opened on the Billie Caldwell tract, have been operating fairly well for some time back, the mine and outside man getting on an average of five days per week.

The heavy frost and freeze of Sunday night cleaned up all the fruit that was in blossom. Out on the mountain it is reported that a few wisps of snow and that frost almost a quarter of an inch in thickness was found on the ground early Monday morning. Leaves on garden strawberry plants were nipped promiscuously, and it is a question now whether the plants will bear half a crop.

Hebrides Islands.

The Hebrides Islands exceed 500 in number, of which only one fifth are inhabited. Thirty of the inhabited islands have a population of only ten souls each, while the Seven Hunters are a group entirely uninhabited. The population of the entire Hebridean archipelago is only 28 to the square mile. They lie a few miles off the west coast of Scotland, the Outer Hebrides, consisting of Lewis, Harris, North Uist, South Uist and Benbecula, while Skye, Mull, Islay and Arran are the principal islands of the Inner Hebrides.

VIRGINIA CHOCOLATE
SHOPStep by Step with the Stars and Stripes
Yankee Chewing Gum Works Way 'Round World

A LONG about 1845 General Santa Anna, former Mexican dictator then in exile in New York, introduced chewing gum to his American acquaintances. General Santa Anna carried a ball of gum from the Zapote tree which—in his outer coat pocket and distributed samples liberally. Thomas Adams later to father the chewing gum industry in America, took one of the samples. A bit of kitchen chemistry produced his one time famous "Black Jack". General Santa Anna is scarcely remembered to day but chewing gum is gradually working its toothsome way around the world.

Today it is chewed in virtually every modern language as well as in some extremely out of the way places. Explorers and traders introduced it to the Indians and the Eskimoes and the natives of northern Siberia. The wise took it into the South Islands. But it took the World War to introduce it to the world at large.

They run to large Cuds—even in China

A soldier first found it was a good substitute for tobacco in the trenches where smoking wasn't permitted. They introduced it to the Belgians and the French. Later the American doughboy spread his popularity with characteristic freedom. Last year chewing gum exports exceeded $3,500,000. In 1919 they were about $100,000.

No longer is gum chewing a short paup's habit. Hundreds of thousands of grown-ups chew gum. The King and Queen of Norway became converts at the Norwegian-American Exposition last September. President Wilson was noted in the press dispatches as having chewed gum at the Versailles peace conference. More people chew today than nations.

Little known with the trail blazers of foreign trade extension will feature the 12th annual convention of the National Foreign Trade Council at Cleveland, May 4-7. They will illustrate, interestingly and instructively, how American made products are now reaching out for new markets at the very ends of the earth.

Work Done by Leaves of Trees.

A single leaf of an apple tree has 100,000 pores through each one of which water is continually passing off into surrounding atmosphere. There are 7,000 leaves on a 60-foot elm tree.
These leaves, if spread out, would cover a surface of 200,000 square feet, or five acres. Over seven tons of water, in the form of vapor, pass out of these leaves into the air within a summer day.

Sharp Reminder.

When poison of any kind is brought into the house it is a good plan to immediately run two common pins through the cork, opposite each other, with the pin points extending about an eighth of an inch past the beads on each side. The prick of the pin gives warning by day or night the instant the cork is touched and proves an effective safeguard against mishaps.

COAL BARON A BIG SUCCESS PRODUCING IMMENSE EGGS

During the present let up in business the residents of the upper Second Ward appear to be going in for chicken husbandry and its attendant evils, one of which appears to be "prevarious abnormalus." To elucidate we might add that the sole topic in social circles where the male bi-ped congregates together above Spruce street is hens and their output.

Some of these quasi ruralites have pens full of blooded stock but Webb Shillingford, one of the most recent bidders for fame among the hen culturists, has thus far contented himself with Clearfield County "barnyard pride" or "run on the mine" as the huckster disposes of them.

At any event Webb appears to be satisfied and the some of his neighbors boast a greater yield per pen Webb says he's entitled to the Barlow for the largest production per hen
In proof thereof he called in all his competing neighbors this morning to show them one product of his hennery which measured 6 1-2 inches across the equator and 8 inches via pole to pole. Webb says "some egg", I call it," and those who looked the monster over agree with him.

Meanings of Dreams of Weapons.

signifies a dis- tious quarrel. To re-

To see an armed man or body of soldiers, fatigue and nervousness. To exercise with weapons, flattering hopes not likely to be realized.
